not more than 2% of the prisoners ever come free again.

Of course, the percentage is higher among those who had short sentences, such as three years. But for those who have to be there 10 or 15 years, such as the prisoners at the Vorkuta Camp, it is very unlikely that they ever get free. You see, when you finish your sentence you get the yellow passport, which differs with the sentence you have received. When you finished a political prison sentence you got a yellow passport under Paragraph 88, and you did not have the right to live in any of the big cities such as Moscow, Leningrad, or Stalingrad. For the criminal prisoners it was the same thing, except that their restrictions were somewhat more extensive. Furthermore, of course, a person carries the stigma of having been a prisoner, and is therefore under continual observation by the MVD.
